

AMERICAN INDOOR AIR QUALITY COUNCIL Press Release

5 December 2007

IAQ Council Releases Special Logos for Accredited Certifications

The American IAQ Council has created a set of distinctive logos for its accredited certification programs.

The logos feature the IAQ Council seal and the certification designation imposed on the Council's well known stars and stripes background.

The IAQ Council has released a separate logo specific to each of its eight certification programs. The logos are available on the IAQ Council website at no charge to certificants. They can be downloaded in a variety of sizes and formats suitable for web-based, desktop or commercial printing.

"We have always made the IAQ Council seal available to our certificants," said executive director Charlie Wiles. "The new logos give our certificants another way to distinguish themselves in the marketplace."

The American Indoor Air Quality Council is a non-profit certifying body founded in 1993 to serve the indoor air quality industry. The IAQ Council operates independent, third-party accredited certification programs for indoor environmental consultants, microbial consultants, microbial remediators, indoor air quality administrators and residential mold inspectors. The IAQ Council certifies more than 5,000 professionals in the United States, Canada and overseas.

For more information about the IAQ Council and its programs, please visit www.iaqcouncil.org.